Dr. Arshia Payman is a U.S. educated board certified physician licensed in Surgery and Medicine in Georgia with a passion for aesthetics, anti-aging medicine and providing superior patient care. She received her undergraduate and medical school training at George Washington University in Washington D.C. She trained at four large Washington D.C. area hospitals, including the National Institutes of Health, INOVA Fairfax hospital, and George Washington University Hospital. She completed her medical school in 2005, and her residency program in 2008, both at George Washington University. Upon relocating to Atlanta with her husband, Dr. Payman practiced medicine at Emory University Hospital and became Assistant Professor of Clinical Medicine.

Dr. Payman is passionate about the health and well-being of her patients, and places emphasis on spending time with each patient and listening to their medical and emotional concerns and cosmetic goals. Her priority is that each patient receives superior and compassionate care from her and her staff. She practices at Derm Clinic M.D., a state-of-the-art AAAHC certified surgical facility, which meets the most rigorous standards for medical safety and patient treatment. Dr. Payman utilizes the latest non-surgical rejuvenation techniques, and each procedure is performed with her vast knowledge of the most recent aesthetic trends and desired outcomes in anti-aging medicine.

Dr. Payman has tailored her practice towards a natural-appearing rejuvenation of the face. Her priority is to focus her treatment techniques on the patient's concerns, which she combines with years of technical expertise in anti-aging medicine. As a woman, Dr. Payman intently attempts to understand her patient's cosmetic and emotional needs and goals for a natural look. Her primary cosmetic focus is to make her patients a more refreshed version of themselves. Derm Clinic M.D. is widely regarded as a practice where concierge-like patient care coincides with expert technical skills and knowledge, and each patient is treated with compassion and respect in a state-of-the-art cosmetic center.
