Dr. Arshia Payman

DERM CLINIC M.D.
BOARD-CERTIFIED PHYSICIAN
& MEDICAL DIRECTOR

The best advice Dr. Arshia Payman ever received was to choose a career path that you love so you'll never tire of your work—and that's exactly what she did. Today, Payman is a board-certified physician and medical director at Derm Clinic M.D., where she's continuing her 12-plus-year career in medical aesthetics.

"Medical aesthetics is an artistic field that has a strong element of creativity involved in planning and treatment implementation. I've always been very artistic and creative and knew this aspect of medical aesthetics would be something I'd love and never tire of," says the George Washington University graduate. And it's safe to say she's found great success in the field, considering some clients have been loyal to her practice for more than a decade. "I take my calling as a provider in aesthetics seriously from an ethical perspective, and I'm continually inspired by all my patients in different ways."

In addition to her role at Derm Clinic M.D., Payman recently became a trainer for Prolenium Medical Technologies, which researches and manufactures dermal fillers used in medical aesthetic practices. "We are continually bringing the latest tried and tested technologies to our practice, so there's always something new in the field of aesthetics being offered at our office," she says.

When she's not with clients, the proud wife and mother dedicates time to her community. Most recently, Payman served on the board of Prevent Blindness Georgia. She says, "It's most important to remember that, as we succeed, our success comes from the communities we thrive in."
